The main building of the Museum is one of Greensboro's oldest, more than a century standing, and embodies history itself, having originally been a First Presbyterian church. Founded in 1924 by a group of volunteers, the vision of the Greensboro and Guilford County. The main building of the Museum is to be a vibrant, visible, and valued community institution. The collections of the museum highlight the city's role in the history of America, telling the personal stories of prominent people from the area. Such individuals include noted author O. Henry, First Lady Dolly Madison, educator Charles Henry Moore, as well as the Native Americans, African Americans, Quakers and so many more who lived the story of the city. Visitors can also learn about the city and county's role in the Colonial Era, the Civil War and the Civil War and the Civil Rights Movement. The Greensboro Historical Museum boasts many exhibits in its permanent collection aimed at peaking a wonder of imagination and sense of nostalgia. Retelling the history of the area in unusual and provocative ways, the Museum takes visitors on a journey of remembrance and education. The collections and archives document the history, the lives and the Atlantic Coastal Plain. Welcome to the Gate City Explore the story behind the city's nickname, in this permanent exhibit at the Museum. Taking visitors through life in the early 1900s, this interactive and immersive exhibit seemingly goes back in time. Highlighting the period when the railroad through Greensboro was the gateway to the rest of the country, Welcome to Gate City lets guests experience what life was like during that time. Murphy Confederate Firearms Focusing in on a specific aspect of the Civil War, the Murphy Confederate Firearms exhibit explores the distinctive and unique weaponry of that time. With over 150 examples of long arms, this robust exhibit showcases weapons from every major Confederate armory. The exhibit is supplemented by contemporary paintings and other Civil War antiques and artifacts, telling the story of the war through the instruments used to carry it out. Zenke Miniatures Room Decorator and designer Otto Zenke, born in 1904, developed a passion for 18th century English interiors. He turned this passion into more than just a hobby, he created miniature masterpieces. During his life, he built 14 miniature rooms, 12 of which were donated to the Greensboro Historical Museum. The museum rotates which of the rooms are on exhibit, but typically three can be seen at any time. Zenke moved to Greensboro in the 1930s, where he was chief decorator for a local furniture company through the 1940s. His miniature rooms, which are even smaller in scale than most, have been exhibited in New York and other American cities. Voices of a City ponders what a city would say if it could tell its story. From ordinary objects such as a rifle from the battle for independence to a flight attendant's handbook from the crash of United Airlines Flight 93 on September 11, 2001, this exhibit takes visitors on a journey through time. Stretching far back into the Revolutionary War era and before, these displays introduce the migration of Europeans to the Carolina backcountry, with its dense forests and plentiful land. The exhibit also educates guests on the Native American tribes of the area and their interaction with the influx of European migrants. Early Greensboro in 1808. The city was named for the Revolutionary War general, Nathanael Greene. At that time, the community was comprised of modest homes, with the feel of a village. You are reading "24 Best Restaurants in Greensboro, NC " Back to Top Service & Sacrifice: 1812 and On This exhibit takes guests on a journey through wars that have raged for the past two centuries, highlighting Greensboro's residents and its place in wartime history. This includes the War of 1812, the Mexican-American War, the First Gulf War and the Afghanistan and Iraq Wars. Debating Liberty: 1800-1890 The struggle and strife of the Civil War was embodied in the turmoil of Greensboro, brought to life in this exhibit. Once pro-union, the debate over slavery created a chasm in the city, with some residents supporting what they viewed as a Bible-ordained right to slavery, and many others supporting the freedom of slaves. When North Carolina seceded from the Union in 1861, it threw Greensboro squarely into the Confederacy and the long war ahead. Denim Capital: 1891-1945 The history of textile production and abundance of cotton in the South made denim a natural fit for industry in Greensboro. The City built up this production, creating jobs and success in the region. During the Second World War, the mills were to put to service in the wartime effort. Changing Times: 1946-1979 The post war era in Greensboro brought residents into an era of changing identity, what the city was, is, could and should be. This included growing strife and unrest regarding segregation, from the streets to college campuses. This exhibit takes a closer look of this time of change for the city during the Civil Rights Movement.
